Well, that was fun.

Hope everyone survived. I know that some staff lost power for 2 days, most of us were buried, and most of us are now dug out. I really don't know where they're going to put all the snow. I saw trucks carting it off down Iron Mountain, headed somewhere east.

I feel like I'm a mountainman, without the snowshoes, navigating the wilderness, when I traipse from the house to the garage. Have you not shoveled yet, you say? And I laugh and say I'm waiting for the dogs to beat down a path -- which they have, in a way, but the path is only weighted for them, not me. I thought it better to forge my own path, sinking through knee deep snow (20-24 inches). You know how hard it is to lift your leg up & over the snow to take the next step? Of course, you do. You've been doing it for 3 days now.

Anyway, I thought I share a few photos and let you know that the shop is open, limited hours. And, as you can see, limited parking. Don't ask what were they thinking.

I'm going home early to beat the ice and none of you should be out, anyway.

Please call before you come. If no one answers, it's a good bet we're not on the phone.

Join the fun and come feel the difference of quality fabrics. But wait a couple of days. :)

Happy quilting!
